The term narcissism is widely used in mental health discourse, but in clinical practice it is a term that may be applied too broadly and without sufficient specificity. One Canadian survey indicated that 25% of patients in outpatient psychotherapy carry the diagnosis of narcissistic personality disorder. In this one-day workshop Drs. Gabbard and Crisp will present clinical and research data that defines the territory of pathological narcissism and the variants of narcissistic personality disorder. Using clinical examples and video clips, they will explore the dilemmas in diagnosis and treatment. They will also provide detailed discussions of transference, countertransference, and ways to tailor the psychotherapy to the patient.
